Crops and Prices.

The floods and storms in different parts of the country during the last two weeks, have wrought such ruin among weeks, have wrought such ruin among growing crops that a teeling is growing in commercial circles that the aggregate crop of the year will fail far short of the usual figures, and that, consequently, prices will steadily advance to a point unprecedented in some years. Suculd the weather, for the next two or three weeks, prove unlavorable for harvesting in the Northwest, and the now promising crops of this extensive region be seriously injured, there is scarcely any doubt that prices would go up immensely; but as the damage by floods and storms so tar as has been conflued to comparatively small areas where there is stadding small grain, there is yet no real ground for apprehension of a great rise in prices above present figures. We think, however, that the indications are that there will be little if any falling off from the present price of wheat. ing off from the present price of wheat. We conclude so from the fact that the anticipated yield has been materially lessened by the rayages of insects and the devastations of floods and storms, and the additional fact the breadth of ground sown is not so large in many portions of the wheat region as usual, or as has gen-sown is not so large in many portions of the wheat region as usual, or as has generally been supposed.

The corn region is the one that has suffered most seriously from the floods. The bottom lands of Southern Illinois, Indiana and Onlo, which are the best cornfields of the United States, have been overflowed to an immesse extent, if the reports be true; and the losses resulting must have the effect of materially reducing the crop and increasing the price. The corn crop of the Northwest, owing to the backward, cold spring, will not be large, at best, so that there is no doubt but that corn will bring a good price through the entire season, and pork and beef, which must be largely made from it, will also pring a remunerative price to the producer.

The prospect, therefore, is very favorable to farmers of Wisconsin, Minnesota and Iowa, unless bad weather hereafter shall destroy their crops. If they realize the returns for their labor which now seem almost assured, business can not but be very brisk the coming sail and

It is curious that women who would recoil from the slightest impuration of dishonesty, who view theit with horror, will defraud the Government by smuggling, or by purchasing goods known to be snuggled, without the least remore of conscience, but with a certain exultation, simply, I believe, because they detest taxes and derive a real pleasure from exercises of ingenuity in outwitting officials.

One lady told of purchasing a quantity of lace and velvet at a trifling cost; then came the bother of getting it name without paying the duty. She accomplished this by cutting the velvet in breadths for skirts, basting these together, and putting on the skirts, and on all other arriccles as much lace as possible. These she packed in her trunk, and they passed for her private wardrobe, although they filled commissions from her frienus. Another brought home, diamonds sewed in the pufflings of a dress worn by her six year olu child.

A New York girl, about to be married, was at Genoa, and wished to convey to America some rolls of velvet. Walle she was exercised about it there passed through the city an officer of the United States Government, accompanied by his wite and sister. The latter, learning the countrywoman's perplexity, sympathized, and put the velvet in her trunk. When the party feached New York some of the gentlemen's friends went in a small Government vessel to take him from Staten Island up to the city. As the trunks were passed from the vessel a Custom House officer said, laying his hand on one of them, "I suppose there is nothing contraband here?" "Nothing," was the reply of both gentleman and wife. His sister was engaged talking, and did not hear, and the velver was landed in safety.

was landed in safety.

A lady occupying a high position at Washington, whose husband was of the Government, made a trip to Europe with him. She "doted" on lace, and here was her opportunity; He promised here was her opportunity: He promised her that she should have as much of the article as she could reasonably desire, provided she did not attempt to smuggle any, which condition she agreed to. The gentleman took with him on his trip a dressing gown and wors it in the privacy of his room as he had been accustomed to do at home. He observed that on many occasions his wife displayed, during their stay on the continent, great anxiety about this gown in various ways and such as seemed to him, at that times unaccountable.

One morning, immediately after their One morning, immediately after their return to this country, he found before he reached his office that the keys he needed he left at home, and retraced, his steps to get them. Letting himself in with the latch key he proceeded to his chamber, and on opening the door found his wife on her knees on the floor, his dressing gown divested of its lining and spread before her, and she, seissors in hand, disengaging from it a white, flimsy fabric, with which it was covered. She sprang up on seeing him, lauched, and exclaimed:

"You are the smuggler. You work that lace all over Europe, and brough it home."—Washington Cor.

MEDICAL.

The above cut represents the Hon. Daniel and Dickinson, former Attorney General of the United States, as seen when attacked with STRANGULATER RUPFURE.

Mr. Dickinson suffered intensely, notwithstanding he had the best surgical aid. Everything was done that science could suggest, and as the last reusely the knife used, and yet he died in great anguish on the third asy. This is a fearful warning to those who are ruptured.
